

Strains and Rheumatism.

A Strange Story. Two sisters had been for some days attending their brother, who was suffering from a common sore throat, severe and protracted, but not considered dangerous. At this time one of the sisters had obtained the loan of a watch from a friend, her own being out of repair. As this watch was a kind of heirloom in the family from which it had been borrowed, particular caution was given lest it should meet with some injury. Both sisters slept in a room adjoining that of the brother, and one night the elder awoke the younger in extreme alarm, and told her she had dreamed that "Mary's watch had stopped," and that when she had told her of it, she had replied, "Much worse than that has happened, for Charles' breath had stopped also." To quiet her agitation, the younger immediately arose, proceeded to her brother's room, found him fast asleep, and the watch carefully put away in a drawer, going correctly. The following night the same dream occurred, accompanied by the same agitation, and quieted in the same manner—the brother being sound asleep, and the watch going. In the morning after breakfast, some of these ladies having occasion to write a note, proceeded to her desk, while the other sat with the brother in an adjoining room.

Having written and folded the note, she was proceeding to take out the watch which was now in the desk, to use one of the seals appended to it, when she was astonished to find it had stopped, and at the same time a scream from her sister hurried her to the bedside of her brother, who, to her grief, had just breathed his last. The disease was considered to be progressing favorably, when he was seized with a sudden spasm, and died of suffocation. The coincidence between the stopping of the watch and the death of the brother, is the most perplexing circumstance of the case, since the mere stopping of the watch, or the death of the brother, might have been explained on very rational principles; or had the watch stopped before or after the death of the brother, it might have been easily supposed to be forgotten to be wound up, or it may have suffered some injury from the hurry and trepidation incidental to anguish and bereavement; but as the case is related, it is certainly a most extraordinary, surprising, and mysterious accident.

Private Character. "I never inquire into a gentleman's private character."—Lady of the Astor.

That's right! Never do it. Never inquire into a gentleman's private character.—Keep his company, walk with him, dance with him, go to theatres, balls, and concerts with him—talk, laugh, and flirt with him, fall in love with him—but don't inquire into his private character, because it might be rather—ahem!

What is it to you whether he is as pure as a saint, or as impure as an imp, so long as he is a pleasant companion, an agreeable talker, or a handsome, fascinating fellow?—What matters it if he makes love to all the pretty single ladies, and many of the fashionable and lovely married ladies in town? It isn't of the least consequence to you—of course not.

What if he should be a gambler, a wine bibber, a rouse f— or anything else that is as bad or worse than these? What matters it? You don't trouble yourself about it—you never inquire into his private character. He swears you are in perfection; he has sworn the same thing to a hundred ladies; he protests on his knees that he loves you to distraction; he has protested that same thing to fifty or sixty others; he calls heaven and earth, the moon and the stars, to witness that you only are the girl of his heart that speech has been repeated too often not to come out naturally; and you believe every word, and give him your "lily white hand," and very likely a kiss at the same time, if he asks you, which, of course, he will. He leaves you at length to personate the same character on another stage, while you flatter yourself, that he is a most devoted, constant lover. Well, no doubt you are right. Better for your peace of mind that you do not inquire into his true character.—True Flag.

Poverty.—Start not at the labor doom of honest poverty. To it we are indebted for the discovery of a new world: it made Franklin a Philosopher, Hogarth a painter, and Napoleon the conqueror of Europe; the mightiest minds that ever astonished the civilized world, were nursed in the vale of poverty; that was their incentive to act, their stimulus to glory and immortality. Pine not, then, at your lot, if you be poor and virtuous; a large fortune to a giddy youth is the most painful judgement, an indulgent heaven can inflict upon man. The inordinate love of wealth, so fatally prevalent in modern times, when, with a great majority riches are a test of respectability, and each a token of worth and virtue, a cloak to screen from crime—is worse than famine, more fatal than the fostering folds to the purple pestilence. Mourning, then, that you are poor—push your faculties into a holier sphere, and reap an abundant store of mental gain in the extended field of an enlightened mind.

The Tomato. But a few years comparatively, have elapsed since the generally introduction of the tomato plant into our country. But few garden vegetables are now in greater favor. The plant possesses many excellent qualities to recommend it to the attention of our farmers and horticulturists. It may be produced on every kind of soil, and always bears abundantly. It grows best, however, on a light alluvial soil. The middle sized varieties of the vegetable are generally preferred for cooking purposes; and when served up to the table nicely cooked and seasoned with salt, pepper, etc., few vegetables are more healthful or agreeable to the palate. The tomato should be largely cultivated by our farmers, both as a home comfort, and as profitable source of income. The value of the fruit may be much increased by culture. The plants should be trimmed, and not permitted to bear all the fruit that sets upon the bushes. The results will be that the fruit will be larger and better; and pains should be taken to bring to as high a degree of perfection as possible an esculent which is becoming more and more extensively a favorite, and which is at once both healthful and nutritious.

The best method of preserving tomatoes, is to pour them, after being cooked and seasoned and while yet hot, either into tin cans, through a small hole in the top of the can, or into glass bottles. Then if the opening be quickly closed up and tightly sealed, they will remain good any length of time. The size of the cans should be proportionate to the size of the family, so that when one is opened the contents may be used before they begin to spoil.

An Excellent Plan for Growing Cucumbers.—We clip the following from an exchange. We have tried the same plan and proved its excellence:

Take a large barrel, or hogshead; saw it in two in the middle, and bury each half in the ground even with the top. Then take a small keg and bore a small hole in the bottom; place the keg in the centre of the barrel, the top even with the ground, and fill in the barrel around the keg with rich earth, suitable for the growth of cucumbers. Plant your seed mid-way between the edges of the barrel and the keg, and make a kind of arbor a foot or two high for the vines to run on. When the ground becomes dry, pour water in the keg in the evening—it will pass out at the bottom of the keg into the barrel and rise up to the roots of the vines, and keep them moist and green. Cucumbers cultivated this way will grow to a great size, as they are made independent both of drought and wet weather. In wet weather the barrel can be covered, and in dry the ground can be kept moist by pouring water in the keg.

Will it not be a merry time when men with a blithe face and open look shall confess that they are poor? When they shall be to the world what they are themselves? * * * Look at this peasant. His face bronzed with mid-day toil. From sunrise to sunset, with cheerful looks and uncomplaining words, he turns the primal course to dignity, and manfully, earns his bread by the sweat of his brow. * * * And here is a white-haired shepherd. As a boy, a child playful as the lambs he tended, he labored. He has dreamed away his life upon hill sides, on downs, on solitary heights. The humble, simple, patient watcher for fellow-man. Solitude has been his companion; he has grown old and wrinkled, bent in the eye of the burning sun. His highest wisdom is a guess at the coming weather; he may have heard of diamonds, but he knows the evening star. He is to our mind a most reverent Knight of the Fleece.—Douglas Jerrold.

Predestination.—"Do you believe in predestination?" said the Captain of a Mississippi steamer to a clergyman who happened to be travelling with him. "Of course I do." "And you also believe what is to be will be?" "Certainly." "Well, I am glad to hear it." "Why?" "Because I intend to pass that boat ahead in fifteen consecutive minutes, if there be any virtue in pine knots and loaded safety valves. So don't be alarmed, for if the boiler ain't to burst, then it won't."

Here the Divine began putting on his hat, and look very much like backing out, which the Captain observing, he said: "I thought you said you believed in predestination and what is to be will be?" "So I do, but I prefer being a little nearer the stern when it takes place."

A BILLION.—What is a billion? The reply is quite simple—a million times a million. No man is able to count it; for you may count 100 or 170 in a minute; but let us suppose you can count 200 in a minute, and in an hour 12,000; in a day, 288,000, and in 365 days, 105,120,000. Let us suppose now that Adam, at the first beginning of his existence, had begun to count—had continued to do so, and was counting still—he would not even now, and according to the usually supposed age of our Globe, have counted near enough, to have made one billion he would have to live 9,513 years, 34 days, five hours, and twenty minutes. Uprighteousness has its punishments here as well as hereafter.

NYMENEAL. MARRIED.—On Thursday, 7th inst., by Rev. S. S. GALLAGHER, Mr. JAMES B. HILL and Miss LUCY A. SHAYER, both of Greenville District.

MAJOR SPARTAN GOODLETT. This eminent citizen of Greenville District closed his useful life on the evening of the 6th instant. He was born in Spartanburg District on the 25th of April, 1787; he was therefore, in his 68th year at his death. The greater portion of his life was spent in Greenville District, as his father, David Goodlett, removed, when he was very young, to the place now belonging to Dr. Crittenden, within two miles of the town of Greenville. There died his father, David Goodlett, and there rest his remains and those of other members of his family, together with those of the first wife of Maj. Goodlett and his own.

Maj. Goodlett was for eight years the Ordinary of Greenville District. This high and responsible judicial and ministerial office he filled admirably well. He was subsequently a member of the Legislature, representing Greenville as she always ought to be, firmly, honestly, and with unwavering devotion to her best interests and those of our common country.

Maj. Goodlett was long a member of the Baptist Church; his usual place at Millford will know him no more forever, and his brethren and sisters will long mourn his removal; but they have the never-ending consolation that he has been removed from earth to the church and congregation of the first born in the Lord, on high.

As a citizen and neighbor, none was more useful and kind. His intelligence enabled him to serve those around him in all the relations of physician, counsellor and friend.—Much of the eminently kind and orderly character of the neighborhood around Millford, is to be attributed to him. His example was one of justice, love, mercy and good works, and it could not, and did not, fail of its proper effect. Not only to his friends, but even to his enemies, (if he had any,) he was kind. To the poor he extended aid, as far as his duty to his numerous family seemed to justify.

Maj. Goodlett was twice married. By his first wife he had eight, and by his second seven children. These, with his mourning widow survive him. To his family he was all in all. Husband, father, master, he was all which affection or duty could demand.—Their loss is indeed great, irreparable, so far as earth is concerned; still a friend, and brother in the Gospel, would say, weep not beloved friends, "he is not dead, he only sleepeth" in the fulness of time he will be found with his Lord and Master, arrayed in the garments of everlasting praise, and crowned with a crown of immortal and un fading glory.
